Editorial Review

Review

“The information in this text is all valuable and important for the students we teach. Friend and Bursuck have done a comprehensive job in covering the very topics that educators should be aware of, know something about, or master. I commend the authors for such a fine job pulling together this very critical material.”

- Janetta Fleming Bradley, University of Tennessee at Chattanooga

“The style of writing is user-friendly. It feels like a conversation between a mentor and teacher is taking place.”

- Melina Alexander, Weber State University

“The use of student examples woven throughout the chapters makes the book very clear and realistic for future teachers who are coming to grips with the idea of inclusion. There are many practical and understandable real-life examples throughout the book.”

- Dr. Genevieve Howe Hay, College of Charleston

“I think this is an excellent text for Introduction/Survey of Special Education courses that are designed to give the learner a broad overview of diversity in the classroom.”

- Jackie Paxton, Ed.D., Arkansas Tech University

Its non-categorical approach helps teachers ensure all students' success regardless of their specific categories of exceptionality.

Highlights of the Fifth Edition...

- Updated discussion of NCLB and IDEA 2004.
- NEW coverage of students with Asperger Syndrome and more prominent and detailed coverage of Autism Spectrum Disorders (ASD).
- New coverage of Response to Intervention (RTI) as an option for identifying students who may have learning disabilities, and relevant new information about Curriculum Based Assessment (CBA).
- IDEA 2004 changes beyond RTI, especially as they affect the possibility of 3-year IEPs, the potential dropping of short-term IEP objectives, procedures for resolving disagreements between parents and school districts, and how social skills are being addressed on IEPs in this era of school reform and accountability for academic achievement.
