Editorial Review

From the Back Cover

"I thought I spoke English . . . until no one understood me." A bit exaggerated? Perhaps. But this statement reflects the experience common to nearly all international speakers of English, regardless of the level of language achieved. Pronunciation is the most variable aspect of English. And, throughout the world, it is the one aspect of English that has, until recently, been given little attention.

When you learn a second language, without learning its pronunciation, you tend to substitute your set of sounds for those in the second language. The particular sound substitutions you will make are logical and predictable. In this program, you will learn which errors you are making and exactly how to correct them.

Learning new pronunciation is a matter of developing or changing habit. And it is achievable, regardless of your age or how ingrained your pronunciation habits are. This program has been designed for you, the individual, regardless of your first language. It has proven effective for both individuals and for group classes.

This program has been based on work with students from many countries. And many students have completed this program. All of them have improved their pronunciation significantly. A number of them have been complimented on their American accent.

From Chapter One: "THROUGH THICK AND THIN" -- Voiceless "TH" at the beginning of a syllable.

I. MAKE THE SOUND Protrude your tongue. Touch your tongue lightly with the upper teeth. Blow. Be careful: 1) Keep your tongue flat. 2) Maintain an even, steady flow of air. If you do not have steady airflow, you are probably either biting your tongue or not protruding your tongue far enough. Your teeth should not touch your tongue during sound production. Check your position in a mirror. 3) The airflow needs to be sufficiently audible. 4) Don't change position during the sound. 5) Be careful how you end the sound. Don't move your tongue until you have stopped blowing. To check your production, maintain the airflow evenly for 5 seconds.
